Writers and artists may team up or work singly to study the interplay of art and words in children's picture books. Writers will concentrate on techniques such as dialogue, rhythm and rhyme. Artists will focus on creating dynamism in their work by learning how the reader's eye moves through a book and by understanding how various points of view are represented by their art. Writers will be expected to choose an illustrator for the book from what they have seen in the field. Artists will be expected to create at least one piece of finished art for presentation with their book. (5 meetings)
