A CLASS ACT

SCCC sets the stage in winning six prizes, including top award, at Kennedy Center

BY STEVE PARKS
steve.parks@newsday.com

Suffolk County Community College was the big winner at last weekend's Kennedy Center American College Theatre Festival finals in Washington, D.C. Oya Bangura of Copiague won the top prize in the prestigious Irene Ryan National Acting Scholarship competition over 15 other finalists from across the country and more than 2,500 student-actors in the eight regional competitions.

"It's like a community college making the Sweet 16 in basketball," says Steven Lantz-Gefroh, Bangura's drama professor and acting coach at Suffolk, "and then winning the championship."

In addition to the $3,000 Irene Ryan scholarship — named for the late actress who played Granny on "The Beverly Hillbillies" TV series — SCCC came away with five other prizes. Robert Doyle was runner-up in both the National Partners of American Theatre Costume Design and the Barbizon awards.

Michael Fales was one of three National Distinguished Actor Award winners for his role in "The Foreigner," which the theater department performed at the festival. Also for their work on "The Foreigner," sound designer Spencer Batho won a scholarship for a University of Nevada-Las Vegas intensive program and Lantz-Gefroh was recognized with a Distinguished Director Award.

"We cleaned up," says Lantz-Gefroh. "We could hear them murmuring in the audience, 'Who are these guys?' "

COLLEGE THEATER HONORS

But the Kennedy Center is well aware of the Suffolk college's reputation. The Ammerman campus theater department in Selden holds the record for two-year schools in placing acting scholarship finalists at the Kennedy awards — eight over the past 18 years, according to Kennedy Center spokeswoman Stephanie O'Neill — all under theater department chairman Charles Wittreich. SCCC alum Gabriel Fazio, currently in a supporting role in the movie "The Place Beyond the Pines," won the finals in 1996. The competition — the Kennedy Center calls it a "national audition" — is dominated by four-year universities. Among those Bangura and her colleagues competed against were UCLA, USC and NYU.

Bangura and her acting partner, Bryan Nee, performed scenes from "Macbeth" and "Desire Desire Desire," Christopher Durang's takeoff on Tennessee Williams' "Streetcar Named Desire," in the competition. And Bangura performed a monologue from Lanford Wilson's "Gingham Dog."

Bangura, 38, who is nearly seven months' pregnant, says she used her condition in interpreting the monologue. Her character, a black woman divorcing a white man, tells him she would have "bashed the brains out" of the child they never had. Pregnancy "is not in the text," Bangura says, "but saying this while she's obviously pregnant by another man is powerful."

'SUFFOLK'S THE BEST'

The child that Bangura and her husband are expecting, due July 7, will be their first. Bangura returned to the Suffolk college on the recommendation of Theatre Three's Jeffrey Sanzel, who hired her as a choreographer for his company's Musical Theatre Factory summer program for kids and teens. "I was going to go to a four-year school, but he said Suffolk's the best."

Next, Bangura plans to get a bachelor's degree at Hunter College. "Then I want to teach dance and be a working actress," she says, adding, "and a mom."

Meanwhile, you can see Bangura and Nee in Moliere's "Tartuffe" through Saturday night at Suffolk's Shea Theatre.
