The Annual Creative Writing Festival

Each spring, the festival brings together professional writers as well as faculty and students of creative writing from colleges and universities across our area for a celebration of creative writing. Festival activities include:

- Readings by Critically Acclaimed Authors
- Lecture/Panel Sessions
- Creative Writing Workshops and a Creative Writing Contest

This event is sponsored in part by the Suffolk County Community College Office of Campus Activities and Student Leadership Development.

Why Creative Writing?

The study of creative writing as part of the Liberal Arts and Sciences/Humanities Emphasis, is designed to prepare students for a wide spectrum of possible study and careers including (but in no way limited to): advanced study in English and creative writing, editing, writing for creative markets, education, law, journalism, public policy, marketing and management. Your practice in critical thinking, expression of ideas, and awareness of people and cultures will prepare you for a number of careers and life experiences.

The Creative Writing Emphasis at Suffolk County Community College Ammerman Campus

This degree option is intended for students wishing to further hone their creative writing craft. The degree requires that students take a number of introductory and advanced creative writing courses, introductory and upper-level literature courses, along with a broad range of Humanities courses. Students earning this degree will have a strong background in the liberal arts/humanities area, literature, and writing. This degree also has been designed to be highly transferable to creative writing or English programs at other four-year universities.

Clubs and Publications

Along with this degree option, the College offers other exciting opportunities for creative writing students. Writers can join the Society of Writers Club, write for and work on the staff of our creative writing journal Evolution, read their work at our many open mic events, and attend readings of established, award-winning authors.
